The man who brought the word "humane" to life brought Connecticut and New England with his words and actions has throttled back his engines, somewhat, as New England Regional Director and has assumed the new leadership role as HSUS Special Projects Director.

Anyone who has ever met, corresponded with, or read about Rear Admiral James C. Shaw, USN (ret.) as Executive Director of the former HSUS Connecticut Branch or Director of the HSUS New England Regional Office, knows that his concern for animals has been lifelong. He has often been heard to say, "Sailors, being close to nature, have always been partial to animals. After all, Noah was a sailor and look what he did!"

Friends and acquaintances of Jim Shaw recently paid tribute to him for the great work he has done to help advance the humane movement to its respected status today. A testimonial dinner and program was held in Stratford, Connecticut.

The program was M.C'd by Raymond Cummings, a regional advisor and former President of the HSUS Connecticut Branch. It featured many prominent speakers.

Attending from the HSUS headquarters office in Washington, D.C. were John A Hoyt, President and Paul G. Irwin, Vice President/Development.

Mr. Allan A. Loeb, Chairman of the Animal Welfare Foundation of Connecticut presented a check for $1,000.00 to Admiral Shaw as a special testimonial gift. The money will be used to establish a James C. Shaw Library Collection at the Norma Terris Humane Education Center. The library and resource center in East Haddam is named after the former regional director.

Miss Norma Terris, who donated land for the HSUS Norma Terris Humane Education Center, commended Admiral Shaw for his leadership role and accomplishments.

John Dommers, Director of the Education Center, presented Admiral Shaw with several testimonial gifts on behalf of his friends. The gifts included a Kodak Carousel projector, a 3-M Copy machine, and a portrait of Christopher Gratton Shaw, after whom the HSUS Scholarship is named.

In response, Admiral Shaw said, "Bettsy and I are overwhelmed by this expression of friendship. The good wishes and generosity of fellow humanitarians on this occasion make past trials and tribulations of humane work more worth while than ever. We extend our affectionate regards along with the hope that we meet soon and often."

***************
During the first contest, about 40 youngsters charged a 25 pound piglet. Over half of them piled on top of the helpless animal in an attempt to grab its greased legs. Twenty or more adults participated in the second contest. The "pile on" was just as big. The majority of spectators, unaware of the cruelties of a greased pig contest, were audibly and visibly disgusted.

The regional director filed a formal complaint with the police department citing that the contests violated Comm. Statute 53-247 and Statute 53-250 which prohibits using animals as prizes. (Each of the winners received a piglet as a prize.) Ignoring a request from the HSUS New England Regional Director that a 4th of July Greased Pig Contest be cancelled, the Old Saybrook, CT police chief and members of the Bicentennial Commission allowed two brutal events to take place before hundreds of spectators.

John Donners met with the police chief days before the events were scheduled and indicated that greased pig contests were interpreted to violate Connecticut cruelty statutes. If the events were allowed to take place, a formal complaint would be lodged. The chief indicated that the events would probably be cancelled, but legal counsel would be sought.

The chief and bicentennial committee decided, for yet unknown reasons, to allow the contests to take place. An N.B.C. News Center 4 team was barred from filming the event by local officials because, "The humane society complained and they didn't want to offend anyone."

After obvious ambivalence on the matter, the police department sent the paperwork to the county prosecutor. Twenty three members of the Bicentennial Committee were named in the cruelty charge.

After a week and a half of study, the prosecutor decided not to seek arrest warrants. He said that, although the events could conceivably come within the statutes, the charge and investigation did not satisfy him that the law was broken. In the future, it is possible that such events could be prosecuted.

The regional director interpreted this decision to favor those named in the complaint because of their obvious prominence in the community. An opinion from the State's Chief Attorney was sought. Although he could not enter the case unless there was misuse of prosecutorial duties, the Chief Attorney concurred with the local ruling.

In one way we lost, but in many ways we won. The plight of animals used in such contests has been lessened. Action will be as swift in the future.

The New England Regional Office recently received a $300.00 matching grant from The Connecticut Humanities Council to plan a public issues project. Acting as project director, John Donners worked with three college professors of the humanities to prepare and submit a project titled, "Is The Hunter A Dying Species?" If the proposed project grant is approved, a state-wide, public symposium featuring nationally-known personalities will be held in Connecticut.

The philosophical, ethical, theological, historical and biological aspects of hunting will be explored, discussed, and debated in detail.

Pending acceptance and approval from The Connecticut Humanities Council, the symposium is slated to be held in early December. Adequate publicity is planned for the event.
Our congratulations to Mrs. Charles M. Lucas, President of The Connecticut Council For Humane Education, for developing and conducting a nine-week course titled CT CONNECTICUT LAWS REGULATING DOGS: ENFORCEMENT AND RELATED TOPICS. A first of its kind, this highly practical course was taught by Mrs. Lucas and visiting lecturers including attorneys, canine control administrators, and humane authorities.

John J. Dommers guest lectured at one of the sessions which attracted over 40 enrollees from southwestern Connecticut.

Because of the success generated by the unique course, plans are being made to conduct it in different parts of the state this coming year.

GETTING THE WORD OUT

Even when animal problems are obvious, at least to those of us who are involved in humane work on a daily basis, it isn’t always easy to get the immediate corrective action we seek. Why? Because most people have never been inside the local shelter, or to the problem area at the zoo, or behind the scenes at an airport animal holding area, to name a few examples. How, then, is it possible to break down the walls of public and political apathy in regards to animal cruelty problems?

We do it by taking maximum advantage of the public media: television, radio, and newspapers. Through live appearances, news releases, public service announcements and films, and letters-to-the-editors, we continually inform and educate to control and prevent animal abuse.

The 76 Citizens Band Radio Operators Club, Inc. recently conducted a “Be Kind To Animals” Coffee Break Benefit at the 76 Auto-Truck Stop in Branford. Pictured with a poster describing pet overpopulation problems are (l-r) Stan Schaefer, 76 Truck Stop Manager, John J. TV star support’s animal program

Frank Converse, who co-stars as “Will” on the popular TV series, “Moving On”, visited the 76 Auto-Truck Stop in Branford with his wife, Astrid, to lend support to a CB-animal benefit program.

The 76 CB’ers Club, Inc. sponsored an April 30, “Coffee Break” to benefit the Humane Society of the United States' animal welfare and humane education programs.

The benefit raised over $800.00 which will be used for educational materials designed to create an awareness of animal welfare and a desire to help in solving these problems.

According to Robert MacBride, President of the 76 CB’ers Club, “Animals play an important role in our lives, and we felt it appropriate to show our concern about the many problems wild and domestic animals face today by supporting the work of the H.S.U.S.”

John J. Dommers, New England Regional Director for the Society and a member of the CB club, helped to organize and conduct the fund raising event. Dommers discussed the local and national animal protection programs conducted by his organization, and showed an animal-related film to the 250 CB’ers on hand at the “Coffee Break”.

Dommers noted that “CB’ers have been very helpful in alerting each other to free roaming dogs and cats on the highway. Many accidents are avoided this way. CB’ers have also called for immediate assistance when animals have been hit and injured.”

COMING OUT FROM BEHIND THE EIGHT BALL

The following text is taken from a letter to a new HSUS program recently mailed by John A. Boyt, President of The Humane Society.

"Today's magazines and newspapers are chock full of stories about kids who are behind the eight ball. The Humane Society of the United States is doing something for those young people. They're the children who can't learn. They're the children who are disabled physically and mentally. They're the children who go to special schools. They're young people on whom we place labels. You know them...there are probably a few on your block.

Nothing seems to work for these kids. Some psychologists believe these children don't get on the right track because they have very low opinions of themselves. The professionals call it a 'poor self-image.'

Here at the HSUS, we have a working program which is improving the image of these behind the eight ball people. It's called SIRE - which stands for Self-Improvement through Riding Education.

From our Norma Terris Humane Education Center in East Haddam, Connecticut, HSUS Educational Specialist Cindy Clarke has been setting up SIRE projects in many parts of New England. For a little over two years, Cindy's been working with all sorts of down-trodden kids. Her program is using horses to help rebuild these young people. And, these youngsters have been coming out from behind the eight ball."
JOIN THE HSUS CLIPPING SERVICE

If you read an article in a newspaper or magazine which pertains to animal welfare, please clip and mail it to the New England Regional Office.

In the past, such clippings have not only kept us informed, but have alerted us to take action. Clippings of regional interest are retained for use here. Clippings of national or worldwide importance are forwarded to HSUS headquarters in Washington, D.C.

Continued appreciative thanks are extended to Harriet MacGregor of Hartford, CT and Marion Bryant of Farmington, ME for an almost daily flow of valuable clippings.

GETTING TOGETHER

TEACHERS! (K-1)

We've previewed and critiqued Scholastic's '76-'77 LET'S FIND OUT year-round learning program. It's titled, "Animals: Their World and Ours." It's excellent - a humane theme throughout.

Write to: Scholastic Magazines, 902 Sylvan Ave., Englewood Cliffs, N.J. 07632 for a sample copy.

SPEAKING OF GIFTS

We have a special offering of a leather key fob and ring and a metal belt buckle with a leather insert featuring a blue whale and calf. The message: "Save the Whales." Either or both would make an excellent present for a friend or yourself. The cost: Key Fob $3.00, Belt Buckle $5.00 (postage paid). Make checks payable to HSUS and send to the New England Regional Office.

These are great stocking stuffers, too!

WHAT'S YOUR PROBLEM?

by: Rear Admiral James C. Shaw

HSUS Special Projects Officer

During the height of the World War II Japanese suicide attacks on the U.S. Navy, my ship was visited by a famous American inventor who scrambled all over the vessel repeating a single question, "What's your problem? What's your problem?" Answers from the crewmen varied but all referred in one way or another to the main problem -- stopping the kamikaze before he stopped us. Our noted visitor stirred together the responses and cooked up his recipe as a solution. It wasn't bad, either, since all of his considerable research entered into the result.

I hadn't thought of the inventor and his reiterated query for years until the other day when a friend, not a member of any humane society, quizzed me about animal welfare. "What's your problem? What's your problem?"

blinders and can't see the cruelty they inflict or tolerate. The same is true for Government men whether legislating, administering, enforcing or judging; where animals are concerned they all too often just don't know enough about the subject to act intelligently or humanely.

Now, and this may surprise you, I am going to lump some humanitarians in the ignorant category regardless of their good intentions. Really, it's true. You may rightly ask, "How can that be?" Here's how: Many humanitarians, on occasion, cannot distinguish cruelty, do not know the law, have no conception of the non-humanitarian's motivations, are unable to inculcate the humane ethic in others, are untrained in leadership, communicating, inspiring, organizing, funding and doing the myriad tasks that must be done in every community if kindness is to supplant cruelty.

So all of us in the humane movement, when confronted with a problem, must think in terms of, "Perhaps I don't know, but I'm surely going to find out. Furthermore, when I do know for sure, I'm going to tell others." This brings us to the role of The Humane Society of the United States as an educational institution founded to delineate areas of ignorance and then to enlist all people of good will to dispel that ignorance which, in turn, should torpedo the causes of cruelty. Thus, The H.S.U.S. is in effect a catalyst endeavoring to instruct and inspire all the people in how to promote kindness and halt cruelty.

In accomplishing these purposes, The H.S.U.S. today is blessed with the most highly regarded reputation in our Society's history and with its most knowledgeable membership of all time. The public does look, listen, learn and act when we do or say something in behalf of animals.

Return now to our initial question: What's YOUR problem? Whatever its specific nature, reflect for a moment. Wherein are the areas of ignorance? Maybe the press does not comprehend the situation, or humanitarians do not have the facts, or politicians can't see the need, or animal-care people are untrained, or teachers don't appreciate the importance. And so on.......

In the humane movement, such ignorance is not bliss. On the contrary, it can be hell for the animals. It's up to us, all of us, to learn the facts, pass the word and lead the action. I have great faith in you, our valued members, that you will do just that, today, as you have in the past.

A POINT OF INTEREST

Greyhound race tracks in New England don't always hit the jackpot. For instance, one in New Hampshire went broke; one in Connecticut moans about competition from Jai Alai; one in Vermont on the drawing board just didn't happen.
