Auction Barns Contribute To Animal Suffering

The meat you may serve for dinner tonight most likely comes from an animal that has been processed through an auction barn. These “animal warehouses” accept animals from ranchers and others to sell for slaughter, through a bidding process. Animals are paraded through the sale ring. If they don’t move fast enough, they are hit with canes and clubs.

The HSUS Gulf States Office is conducting an ongoing investigation and inspection program of auction barns. We find that animals are continually exposed to stressful and, often, outright brutal treatment. The frightening journey for many animals intended for food purposes begins when they are trucked from the ranch to the auction. Transporting vehicles often lack protection from weather extremes and exhaust fumes. Cattle are overcrowded and forced to travel for hours without rest. If an animal falls and is injured while being loaded, it usually is still sent on its way regardless of the pain it is suffering.

The HSUS confronted these auction-barn owners and asked local prosecuting attorneys to file cruelty charges unless such brutal practices were halted. Our actions have improved conditions at many of these auctions. Because there are so many auction barns throughout our region, we ask all caring people and local humane societies to visit their nearby sale barns. If you observe cruelty, write a letter of complaint to the auction-barn owner, with a copy to your local prosecuting attorney, local newspaper, and The HSUS. Together we can help to end this cruel treatment of animals!

INSIDE
- Pit Bull Pulling Contests
- Decompression Halted
- Oklahoma Legislation
- Charro Rodeo Condemned

HSUS Pushes Strong Livestock Legislation

Following last year’s massive horse starvation case in Falls County, Texas, The HSUS Gulf States Office began working for remedial legislation. Welcome encouragement came from Gov. White’s office in the form of promises that he would “seek legislative solutions.” Throughout the year, Regional Director Bill Meade met with representatives of the governor’s staff and other humane groups concerned with the problem. The purpose of the meetings was to find a way to prevent and to deal with any future disasters like that which occurred in Falls County.

Three proposed bills came out of these meetings. One would set standards for livestock transportation and auction barns. The second proposed a task force to deal with future disasters involving livestock or horses. The third bill would give enforcement powers to legitimate humane-society investigators. These bills, if enacted, would be a giant step towards the proper care, treatment, and protection of all horses and livestock.

Unfortunately, Gov. White’s promise to seek legislation has not yet been fulfilled. After the governor’s office reported that they did not have enough time to work on the issue, Bill Meade wrote a strong letter reminding the governor of his promise.

Currently, The HSUS is seeking legislators to sponsor and work for the bills in case Gov. White does not act. Although disappointed at his inaction so far, we still hope these badly needed bills will be introduced and passed.
In the wake of new state laws forbid divulging facts, some pit bull owners are turning to another activity called dog pulling. Pit bull dogs are hitched to cars and forced to pull extremely heavy weights (over 4,000 pounds). Each dog must pull the cart 15 feet within 60 seconds. If the dog succeeds, 200 pounds will be added to the cart for the next pull. The HSUS Gulf States Office is concerned that this intense strain on a dog may cause injury and possibly death from stress and overwork. As dealers grow their business, they sometimes use as live bait during training to get the dog focused and conditioned to respond to the far-high-raise used during competition. Our investigator will be visiting these pulling contests in our region and will watch for possible cruelty or injury inflicted upon animals.

Pit Bull Pulling Contests Can Cause Cruelty

Court Rules on Arkansas Puppy Mill Case

Our last Gulf States Report described a puppy mill in Jacksonville, Arkansas, which was charged with cruelty to animals. The Pulaski County Humane Society brought the charges, with The HSUS giving guidance and support. The puppy mill was overcrowded and had severe problems with sanitation related to poor cleaning procedures. The puppies were sold in a local pet store owned by the same person.

HSUS Investigator Bertie Weller has traveled our four-state region in an ongoing search for these cruel puppy breeding factories. They normally must be licensed by the USDA and meet certain standards. Often these standards are not enforced strongly enough.

In this particular case, the court ruled that the humane society should perform regular inspections to ensure minimum health and sanitary standards are met. A final judgment is to be handed down after one year's operation under this probationary ruling.

Around The Region

SULDELL, LOUISIANA - The Animal Assistance League received a new 512-square-foot puppy mill from the Pulaski County Humane Society. The shelter was also air conditioned and refurbished throughout to make it attractive and pleasant.

NACOGDOCHES, TEXAS - Scholarships for teachers to attend the annual humane education workshop at the Stephen Foster Foundation (Austra) State University will be available through the Roger Montgomery Humane Education Fund. Contact the Humane Society of Nacogdoches for details.

WICHITA FALLS, TEXAS - In mid-1984, Wichita Falls Animal Control was awarded HSUS Accreditation jointly with the Humane Society of Wichita County. In making this award, HSUS recognized the combined efforts and unique cooperative approach of the two organizations to solving animal problems in their community. Congratulations to both organizations!

HARRISON, ARKANSAS - Completion of new holding pens at the Ozark Humane Society was made possible by a donation of insulation and wiring by a local business and a vocational school. The new shelter manager has worked hard to improve the facility.

HOUSTON, TEXAS - The Houston SPCA had two vision counselors to help screen prospective pet adopters. Their important task is to determine whether a pet truly is able to furnish a pet with a good, long-term home.

HSUS Condemns Charro Rodeo

These rodeos feature a Mexican cowboy riding horseback, chasing, subduing, and grabbing the animal's tail. Then, by twisting and pulling the animal's tail, the charro (rodeo rider) subdues the animal. Our Gulf States Office received complaints about these activities and investigated a recent San Antonio charro. We warned the Charreria Association that, if cruelty was observed, we would ask the Bexar County District Attorney to prosecute under the state anti-cruelty law. The warning was effective apparently because the charreria was greatly toned down and the operators had a much calmer attitude.

The HSUS opposes all forms of rodeos on the grounds they cause intentional animal suffering for no purpose other than to entertain people and make money.

Oklahoma Pushes Strong Laws For Animals

An ambitious effort is underway in Oklahoma to organize statewide support for three important animal-welfare bills. The proposed bills are a mandatory spay-and-neuter requirement for shelter adoptions, anti-cockfighting legislation, and anti-pound seizure measures.

The spay/neuter bill, known as the Dog & Cat Sterilization Act, has the greatest potential to reduce future killing of surplus pet animals. By requiring the spaying or neutering of all pets adopted from shelters, a big reduction in the animal overpopulation can be achieved in coming years. Representative Andeson and Senator Watson have agreed to sponsor and work for this important bill.

Our Gulf States office has also been working throughout the region to have anti-cockfighting legislation introduced. We are happy to report that Senator Foster and Representative为代表的 representatives have agreed to sponsor and work for this important bill.

Puppy Mill Case

Although we were finally successful in the case, nevertheless it is sad that large cities won't respond more quickly to citizens' urgent concerns related to issues of animal suffering.

In this charro event, the steer's tail is twisted rudely until the animal falls on its side. Such events, as in American rodeos, are cruel and without redeeming value. The HSUS continually works to expose this type of animal abuse.

Director's Comment

by Bill Meade

This issue of our Report highlights some of the suffering inflicted on animals raised and used for food. Unfortunately, as in the auction barns we describe, the suffering of these animals is often associated with the loss of an egg or a life under the sun. The HSUS will continue to work against all forms of animal cruelty.

Farms

Under the guise of preserving and promoting the image of the Mexican cowboy, charreadas, or Mexican rodeos, are held in several Texas cities each spring. These rodeos feature a Mexican cowboy riding horseback, chasing, subduing, and grabbing the animal’s tail. Then, by twisting and pulling the animal’s tail, the charro (rodeo rider) subdues the animal. Our Gulf States Office received complaints about these activities and investigated a recent San Antonio charro. We warmed the Charreria Association that, if cruelty was observed, we would ask the Bexar County District Attorney to prosecute under the state anti-cruelty law. The warning was effective apparently because the charreria was greatly toned down and the operators had a much calmer attitude.

The HSUS opposes all forms of rodeos on the grounds they cause intentional animal suffering for no purpose other than to entertain people and make money.

In this charro event, the steer’s tail is twisted rudely until the animal falls on its side. Such events, as in American rodeos, are cruel and without redeeming value. The HSUS continually works to expose this type of animal abuse.

High consumption of meat and animal fat has resulted in the gradual elimination of factory farming. Modern meat and dairy farms are now divided into individual units of “right” light color for gourmets. Many animals are given diets of growth hormones and antibiotics. These drugs and chemicals end up in meat consumed by the public.

When the animals leave the factory farm, their lives become even worse. They are often restricted to a diet of water supply. Six billion tons of top soil are lost yearly to erosion because of deforestation. Irrigators who raise feed for livestock consume over half of the nation's water supply. Six billion tons of top soil are lost yearly to erosion because of deforestation. Growth hormones and antibiotics have been shown by the National Academy of Sciences to encourage disease in consumers. All of this has dictated HSUS' policy of promoting the concept of “eating with conscience” and banning cruelty to livestock and food animals. This issue of our Report highlights some of the suffering inflicted on animals raised and used for food. Unfortunately, as in the auction barns we describe, the suffering of these animals is often associated with the loss of an egg or a life under the sun. The HSUS will continue to work against all forms of animal cruelty.
Regional Director Bill Meade announced in December 1984 the receipt of several major gifts that allowed The HSUS to purchase a larger headquarters in Corpus Christi, Texas, for the Gulf States region.

In making the announcement, Meade thanked the Earl C. Sams Foundation of Corpus Christi for their initial gift, which helped get the project underway. Others among our membership have graciously sent additional funds to help. Gifts are still being sought, however, to help cover the total cost. By owning our office, almost $10,000 will be saved in yearly rent.

In opening the new office, Bill Meade outlined the beginning of two-day training programs, available immediately, at no cost to any humane-society officers or animal-control personnel. The programs consist of two, 2-hour sessions each day. First topics scheduled are (1) forming a humane society; (2) starting humane education programs; (3) investigating cruelty cases; (4) fund raising and membership expansion; (5) getting legislation passed; (6) forming a low-cost spay/neuter program; (7) evaluation of euthanasia methods; and (8) proper design for new shelters.

We have arranged special room rates of $25 a day for one or two people in a comfortable motel facing beautiful Corpus Christi Bay. To arrange a two-day training session of your choice, simply call us at (512) 854-3142.

The new HSUS Gulf States Office is located on the third floor of the Congressional Plaza condominium office in Corpus Christi, Texas.

PLEASE NOTE: We have a change in address.

Reflect for a moment.... How can I help animals even when I no longer share their world?
By your bequest for animal protection to The Humane Society of the United States.
Your will can provide for animals after you're gone.
Naming The HSUS demonstrates your lasting commitment to animal welfare and strengthens the Society for this task. We will be happy to send information about our animal programs and material which will assist in planning a will.

Please send will information to:
Name __________________________
address ________________________
City ____________________________ State_______
ZIP code_______________________

Mail in confidence to Muruga S. Madden, Vice President/General Counsel, The Humane Society of the United States, 2100 L Street, N.W., Washington, DC 20037.

The Gulf States Regional Report is a publication of The Humane Society of the United States
Gulf States Regional Office
6262 Weber Road, Suite 305
Corpus Christi, Texas 78413
(512) 854-3142
William R. Meade III, Director
The Gulf States Regional Office serves the states of Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and Texas. The office operates Monday through Friday and is closed on federal holidays.

©1985 by The HSUS. All rights reserved.